

Dr. Randal Pinkett has established himself as an entrepreneur, speaker, author and scholar, and as a leading voice for his generation in business and technology. He is the founder, chairman and CEO of his fifth venture, BCT Partners, a multimillion-dollar consulting firm headquartered in Newark, NJ that provides organizational development and capacity building services to public and nonprofit sector organizations. He is also a partner in the Chicago-based joint venture, Blackwell-BCT Consulting Services, which specializes in management consulting and information technology solutions for the Federal government and Fortune 500 corporations.

Dr. Pinkett has received numerous awards for business and technology excellence including the Information Technology Senior Management Forum's Beacon Award, the National Society of Black Engineers' Entrepreneur of the Year Award, and the National Urban League's Business Excellence Award. He has been featured on nationally televised programs such as The Today Show, Live with Regis and Kelly,

Interview With Author Dr. Pinkett PhD

Written by Kam Williams

Monday, 19 December 2011 17:41

---

Nightline

and

Larry King Live

. In 2009, he was named to New Jersey Governor Jon Corzine's official shortlist as a potential running mate for Lieutenant Governor.

A Rhodes Scholar, Dr. Pinkett holds five degrees including: a B.S. in Electrical Engineering from Rutgers University, where he competed as a high jumper, long jumper, and captain of the men's track and field team; a M.S. in Computer Science from the University of Oxford in England; and a M.S. in Electrical Engineering, MBA, and Ph.D. from MIT. Most notably, he's still the only African-American-winner of Donald Trump's reality-TV show, "The Apprentice."

Born in Philadelphia and raised in New Jersey, Dr. Pinkett is a proud member of Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity

, Incorporated and attends

First Baptist Church

in Somerset, NJ, where he resides. He is happily married to his wife, Zahara, and they are both proud parents of their daughter, Amira. Randal firmly believes that "for those to whom much is given, much is expected," so throughout his endeavors, he places great emphasis on his desire to give back to the community.

Dr. Pinkett is the author of Campus CEO: The Student Entrepreneur's Guide to Launching a Multimillion-Dollar Business and No-Money Down CEO: How to Start Your Dream Business with Little or No Cash. Here, he talks about his latest book, Black Faces in White Places: 10 Game-Changing Strategies to Achieve Success and Find Greatness.

This interview was conducted last summer.

-----

Kam Williams: Hi Randal [Pinkett], thanks for another interview. How have you been?

Randal Pinkett: Great! Great. I appreciate this opportunity to reconnect.

KW: Same here. I really enjoyed “Black Faces in White Places.” Why did you write the book?

RP: The book is a reflection both of my own experiences and of those of many other African-Americans, particularly folks who have progressed in their careers. Although I was born in Philadelphia, I was raised in East Windsor, NJ, a predominantly-white suburb where we were among a handful of black families. That trajectory has continued in my careers in college, grad school and as an entrepreneur in corporate America where I have found myself one of a few, if not the only, person of color. Anyone who has been in those types of environments knows that it gives rise to a unique set of challenges characteristic of the struggles that America faces as it relates to leveling the playing field for everyone. So, the book is designed not so much to lament racism but rather to be proactive by helping to address the issue by providing strategies, tools and solutions to make it easier for the next generation.

KW: I made a reference to Ellis Cose’s classic study, “The Rage of a Privileged Class,” in my review of your book. He has just published a follow-up report, “The End of Anger,” which suggests that educated blacks who have made it are by-and-large content with the state of affairs in American society. Have you read it yet?

RP: No, I haven’t but I’m eager to get a copy of Ellis’ book.

KW: His basic thesis is that well-educated blacks are no longer an angry class by-and-large but are comfortable with how they’ve fared in corporate America. Do you agree?

RP: That’s a fascinating question. We did see “The Rage of a Privileged Class” as one of the bodies of work which we were attempting to build upon, but looking at it through a generational lens. Our argument in the book is that the anger and the rage are no longer in play, although the challenges that gave rise to those emotions still exist. However, I think this generation of professionals has learned to navigate these corporate environments in ways that they don’t internalize the discrimination, stereotyping or attempts to pigeonhole them as much as they seek to be empowered by the talents they bring to the table. So, when I speak to people like Roland Martin, Hill Harper or Ben Jealous, I don't detect a sense of rage, but a sense of acknowledgment that there are still challenges, that they are accepting of those challenges, and that they have resolved to overcome them. The generation addressed in Ellis' earlier book faced the tacit expectation that you had to change who you were in order to succeed. That assumption has now been shattered. America has at least progressed to the point where people are accepted as they are. But that's not a panacea; there's still much work left to do.

KW: From what I've seen, this recession has really devastated the black middle-class, between unemployment and home foreclosures. A lot of folks have suffered very serious setbacks after losing their job or being denied coverage by their health insurance company. So, I was quite surprised by Cose's conclusion.

RP: That's a good point. I think the economy has exacerbated those challenges and highlighted how racism rears its head. In the book, I looked at the unemployment statistics for college-educated African-Americans, and the numbers were pretty stark. There's certainly a large segment of the black community whose discontent has recently been amplified, but I also do believe that there are those members of the black intelligentsia who, while not angry, are still frustrated at the pace of change.

KW: Dante Lee, author of "Black Business Secrets," asks: What was the best business decision you ever made, and what was the worst?"

RP: My best decision was to not go into business alone, but to find strength in numbers with three other classmates of mine at Rutgers University. I can say, unequivocally, were it not for that friendship and that brotherhood we wouldn't be where we were today. Curiously, my worst business decision was prematurely allowing others into the partnership who hadn't proven themselves to be worthy, and then later having to figure out how to escort them out the door. [Laughs]

KW: How would you say winning on "The Apprentice" has impacted your life?

RP: It has created a platform for me as an author and as a speaker that would've been more difficult to accomplish otherwise. Businesswise, it has enabled me to get access to decision-makers more easily, because they're already familiar with me from the show. Not everybody returns my phone calls, but the pros far outweigh the cons.

KW: What did you think of Donald Trump's aborted Presidential campaign, and his making such a big thing about Obama's birth certificate?

RP: [Chuckles] I spoke to Donald about a week or two before he bowed out of the race. I reached out to him to bring to his attention that the way in which he was couching his attacks on the President was alienating and offending not just African-Americans, but Americans in general. It was my sense that there weren't many people, if any, in his inner circle who were challenging him in that regard. So, I raised the issue to let him know that I was personally offended by some of the things he'd been saying, and that he needed to learn how to relate to all Americans if he seriously aspired to be President.

KW: How did he respond?

RP: I don't know that that message was initially well-received, but it certainly was by the end of the conversation after I simply lamented that I was approaching him in the spirit of sharing some constructive criticism.

KW: Do you think he was ever serious about running, or was it all just a publicity stunt to boost the ratings of his TV show?

RP: I don't know. Only he would know. Nevertheless, I think he did learn some lessons from the heightened public scrutiny, and I hope he took those lessons to heart.

KW: Didn't he recently invoke your name when he was being labeled a racist?

RP: Yes, he said, "How can I be a racist, when I hired Randal?" That was another reason why I called him. I said, "Donald, you've got to be kidding. There have been 11 Seasons of "The Apprentice" and I'm still the only person of color ever to emerge victorious." It's unbelievable!

KW: I'll never forget how on the finale he tried to twist your arm to get you to agree to share the title with the runner-up, when you should obviously have been the runaway winner.

RP: I also mentioned that to him. I said, "To add insult to injury, I'm the only person you ever asked to share the title."

KW: Is there any question no one ever asks you, that you wish someone would?

RP: How can we create greater economic opportunity in the African-American community? It's not surprising, but studies have shown that black-owned businesses employ a far greater percentage of African-Americans than other companies. So, I really do believe that the way to deal with the high, black unemployment rate is by encouraging African-American entrepreneurship. By moving into that realm of thinking like an owner instead of like an employee will have a ripple effect of creating more opportunities right in our community.

KW: The Tasha Smith question: Are you ever afraid?

RP: I'm seldom afraid. My greatest fear has been of letting God, my parents, my family or my community down. I'm the first to acknowledge that I've really been blessed, but that also means that I've got to be a blessing to others. I think I often work myself too hard, Kam, out of fear of letting of letting other people down.

KW: Do you ever wish you could have your anonymity back?

RP: No, I don't mind it at all. I'm not in the category of celebrity that I can't go to the grocery store. It's actually humbling when someone does recognize me and approach me, because they're always so proud, respectful and encouraging. And they invariably say: "I will never forget that Apprentice finale." [Laugh Out Loud]

KW: The Teri Emerson question: When was the last time you had a good laugh?

RP: Other than the one I had a second ago? [Laughs some more]

KW: That'll do. What is your guiltiest pleasure?

RP: Either a nice slice of apple pie or a good peach cobbler.

KW: The bookworm Troy Johnson question: What was the last book you read?

RP: "Entrepreneurial Finance" by Professor Steven Rogers of the Kellogg School. <http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/0071591265/ref=nosim/thslfofire-20>

KW: The music maven Heather Covington question: What are you listening to on your iPod?

RP: I just got Jill Scott's new CD and I absolutely love it. <http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/B004Y1QPXM/ref=nosim/thslfofire-20>

KW: What is your favorite dish to cook?

RP: Curried chicken with rice and peas and sweet plantain. I got the recipes from my Jamaican roommate when I lived in England for two years.

KW: The Uduak Oduok question: Who is your favorite clothes designer?

RP: A good friend who was a college classmate of mine, Jarvis Parker. He does all my suits.

KW: When you look in the mirror, what do you see?

RP: I see a husband, a father, an entrepreneur, a speaker, an author, a community servant and a child of God.

KW: If you could have one wish instantly granted, what would that be for?

RP: For true equality in society.

KW: The Ling-Ju Yen question: What is your earliest childhood memory?

RP: Wow! It's of my mother explaining to me when I was about 5 years-old why I couldn't sell my toys to other kids in the neighborhood because she had bought them for me.

KW: The Judyth Piazza question: What key quality do you believe all successful people share?

RP: Persistence! Without question. I believe that the race is won by he who endureth. If you desire to be successful, and you work at it long and hard enough, you will almost inevitably get there. Those who throw in the towel too quickly or too easily will never find success.

KW: The Tavis Smiley question: How do you want to be remembered?

RP: As a man who was blessed and a blessing to others.

KW: Thanks again for the time, Randal [Pinkett], I really appreciate it.

RP: Thank you, Kam [Williams]. I'll definitely give you a heads up the next time I'm in Princeton. In the meantime, let me know if there's any way I can help you out.

The book is available on www.amazon.com , .ca or www.barnesandnoble.com

Click on this link to know more about the book:

http://www.youtube.com/watch?feature=player\_detailpage&v=TA4RRwTCedw

About the author of this article: Kam Williams is a syndicated film and book critic who writes for 100+ publications around the U.S., Europe, Asia, Africa, Canada and the Caribbean. He is a member of the New York Film Critics Online, the NAACP Image Awards Nominating Committee and Rotten Tomatoes. He is a contributor to TheLoop21.com. He is also a columnist for www.afrotoronto.com and

www.megadiversities.com

. In 2008, he was Voted

Most

Outstanding Journalist of the Decade by the Disilgold Soul Literary Review. Williams is an erudite Attorney who holds a BA in Black Studies from Cornell University, an MA in English from Brown University, an MBA from The Wharton School, and a J.D. from Boston University. Kam Williams is a member of the Bar in NJ, NY, CT, PA, MA & US Supreme Court bars. He lives in Princeton (New Jersey) with his wife and son. Kam Williams can be reached at kwilliams@megadiversities.com